HerStory tour experience in Athens

Combining theory with practical application enhances understanding and facilitates the implementation of knowledge in real-world scenarios.

By bridging the gap between theory and hands-on experience, individuals can develop a more comprehensive skill set and achieve greater success in their efforts.

KEAN, partners from Athens, that host 2nd transnational project meeting, therefore showed consortium an example of how the HerStory map tour could look in practice.

Learning oportunitie in Athens

By doing so, they presented and acquainted partners with two women statues in Athens that played significant roles in Greek history. Through this encounter, partners gained a clearer understanding of how this aspect of the project will unfold in practice and what to anticipate.

HerStory promo video

Acknowledging the accomplishments of women across various aspects of life greatly influences the cultivation of self-esteem and opens up fresh opportunities for girls and young women.

In Athen's transnational meeting, partners used the opportunity and filmed short videos. These videos represent statements of each partner about the HerStory project, its aim and importance to highlight the footprint of women in history and in cities across Europe.

Videos were edited and merged in one short film that partners will use on different events, conferences, meetings and therefore spreading the word about women's, which role and imprint was many times not recognized in history.

Exploring online HerStory map

This part of the project pertains to the execution of physical explorations of the HerStory Map with the participants.

Initially, partners will conduct pilot tours of the map with the help of the HerStory online platform and Mobile App, with the aim of identifying any errors or shortcomings.

Following necessary adjustments, they will proceed to the second phase, involving the actual implementation of the HerStory Map Tour with approximately 160 participants from the target groups in each partner city.

Therefore participants, including young people, students in History and Gender Studies, community activists, academic experts, teachers, and representatives from women's and human rights organizations in each partner country, will experience the HerStory Map in groups of 10-15 individuals.

At the conclusion of each tour, participants will provide feedback on their overall experience.
